The course is delivered one day a week over 10 weeks. Each session lasts for four hours. The sessions will consist of practical teaching, assessments and ongoing booklet completion. In addition you will be required to do homework each week: the number of hours homework will depend on your experience and previous qualifications but the course is designed to provide for those with NO experience or previous qualifications. If you think of 4 hours of homework a week as a maximum, that should cover all eventualities

Delivery is contact with a tutor, homework and booklet completion.

All course materials are provided although there are suggested links to websites etc that will provide opportunities to gain extra knowledge and a greater depth of understanding.

The ten-week programme may be delivered at different times throughout the year. For each course, the tutor's scheme of work is made available on enrolment with access to teaching resources. The scheme of work will outline course details together with dates of delivery and any breaks to accommodate national holidays and school term breaks.

Attend to succeed

We advise full 100% attendance to the programme but we understand life happens and we will do our best to accommodate your needs. When enrolling onto the programme you acknowledge the dates and times of expected attendance.

Equality & Diversity

We welcome everyone and have an open access policy. The nature of the course is such that it contains practical elements but if you have any concerns regarding access and learning, please discuss your needs with us and we will do our best to accommodate those needs.

What a boring world it would be if everyone was the same. We especially want people who think differently.

We are a small teaching provision, which allows us the space and time to offer tailored learning.
